

Building Strong Naturalist Communities Tools for Self-Awareness and Relationships in Our World

A Workshop with Jon Young

Brattleboro, Vermont

Friday, March 31st – Sunday, April 2nd, 2006

For thousands of years, the art of passing on human knowledge has been tied to the need to survive in nature. Although the world has changed drastically in the last few generations, our bodies & minds are still perfectly designed to learn as our ancestors did – from the natural world.

This program identifies core ingredients necessary to create a powerful community of natural learning that applies very well to adapting and surviving in the world today. We will draw on native sources of stories and teachings to remind us of our own native body, mind and spirit. This workshop will bring together members of regional naturalist communities similar to Earthwork Programs from across the northeast region.

COST: $250. Includes 2-day, 2-night workshop, all food, camping or indoor accommodations.

REGISTRATION: To reserve a spot, send $100 deposit, ($50 nonrefundable) payable to: Earthwork Programs c/o Frank Grindrod P.O. Box 150 Amherst MA, 01004. A confirmation e-mail will be sent after registration is received. Check, cash or money order accepted.

ENROLLMENT DEADLINE IS MARCH 13TH.

CONTACT: If you have questions concerning facilities, camping, or program content contact: Frank Grindrod at (413) 522-0338 or e-mail frank@earthworkprograms.com.

Inspired by his childhood mentoring by tracker Tom Brown, Jr., JON YOUNG has passionately researched and put into practice the techniques used by native cultures to mentor their children as naturalists, trackers and valued community members. He has gathered teachings of many native cultures along with the tools of modern field ecology into a powerful medicine bundle of native approaches that trigger our natural blueprint for learning.
